

Amit Chaudhary Appointment Expands Quick Heal Product Mandate

Quick Heal is putting product strategy at the centre of its next phase, with Amit Chaudhary taking charge of product management across cybersecurity and data privacy.

Quick Heal Technologies has appointed Amit Chaudhary as Vice President – Product Management, giving him responsibility for product vision, strategy and roadmaps across its cybersecurity and data privacy portfolio. The Amit Chaudhary appointment comes with a broader mandate covering both consumer and enterprise products.

The move places product management closer to the centre of Quick Heal's plans around innovation, customer needs and AI-led solutions. With more than 26 years of experience across IT, telecom, cybersecurity, cloud and enterprise networking, Chaudhary brings a mix of technology and business experience to the role.

A wider product mandate across Quick Heal

Before joining Quick Heal, Chaudhary spent a significant part of his career at Bharti Airtel, where he served as Vice President and Practice Head for Cyber Security and Cloud. His experience also includes business transformation, product propositions, strategic growth and technology-led solutions across enterprise and government segments.

At Quick Heal, his responsibilities will cover the full product lifecycle. This includes defining portfolio vision and roadmaps, strengthening Product Management, improving portfolio performance and elevating user experience.

The company also expects the product function to connect customer insights, market intelligence and emerging technologies more closely. The aim is to turn those inputs into offerings that can improve adoption, customer satisfaction and long-term business growth.

AI and customer insight move higher on agenda

The appointment also highlights where Quick Heal sees its product portfolio heading. Chaudhary's mandate includes strengthening collaboration across teams and accelerating differentiated, AI-led solutions across Quick Heal and Seqrite.

That focus matters because the role is not limited to launching new products. It brings customer and market insight into product decisions, while connecting those decisions with the wider cybersecurity and data privacy portfolio.

Quick Heal CEO Harish Kumar G S highlighted Chaudhary's experience across cybersecurity, cloud, AI and business leadership as important to sharpening the company's product vision and innovation efforts.

The Amit Chaudhary appointment gives Quick Heal an experienced product leader with exposure to both technology and business functions. His background across cybersecurity, cloud and enterprise environments could support the company's effort to bring its consumer and enterprise portfolios closer to evolving customer expectations.
